PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE UNITED STATES COURT OF APPEALS FOR THE SECOND CIRCUIT

TO: The Honorable, The Chief Justice and the Associate Justices of the Supreme Court of the United States.

Ernesto Santo Gonzalez, petitioner herein, respectfully prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit entered March 7, 1973 affirming judgments of conviction of the United States District Court for the Eastern District of New York, Weinstein, D.J., rendered July 26, 1973, convicting the petitioner after a jury trial, of importing marijuana, possessing marijuana with the intent to distribute same, and conspiracy to import and possess marijuana in violation of 21 U.S.C. Sections 960(a)(1), 952(a), 841(a)(1), 963 and 846 and 18 U.S.C. Section 2, and sentencing the petitioner to imprisonment for a term of five years plus five years special parole on each of three counts, each count to be served concurrently.

OPINION BELOW

The Court of Appeals affirmed the conviction without written opinion immediately upon conclusion of oral argument. The order of the Court of Appeals affirming the judgment of conviction is set forth as Appendix A. No motion was made for reargument or rehearing en banc. There was no opinion in the District Court.

JURISDICTION

The order of the Court of Appeals affirming the conviction was entered on March 7, 1973. No application has been made to extend the petitioner's time to file a petition for a writ of certiorari.

The jurisdiction of this Court is invoked under 28 U.S.C. Section 1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether this Court should resolve the conflict in circuits on the issue of whether in a case which presents a substantial question as to the identification of a defendant as a criminal actor, the trial judge should be required, sua sponte, to include language in the charge to the jury which serves to focus the attention of the jury on the question of identification.

2. Whether in the case at bar the failure of the trial judge to sua sponte charge the jury respecting the crucial identification issue deprived the defendant of a fair trial.

STATEMENT

The indictment named, in addition to the petitioner herein, one Jose Ancisar Pineda-Marin, Hugo Suarez, Moises Banguera, and Erasmus Flecher all of whom were jointly charged and jointly tried on each of the three counts of the indictment.

On March 20, 1973, customs agents in New York received a memorandum from a customs office in Galveston, Texas which indicated that the vessel Francisco Miguel, a ship of Colombian registry was a possible narcotics carrier (T44).[1] The vessel had docked in several ports in the United States prior to its arrival in Brooklyn, New York. On at least one occasion the vessel was searched prior to its arrival in New York. No contraband was discovered as a result of the search (T61). On March 25, 1973, at approximately 11:30 a.m. the Francisco Miguel arrived at the State Pier in Brooklyn, New York (T19). Approximately nine hours later, at 8:30 p.m. a surveillance was commenced under the direction of Special Agent John A. Grieco (T18, line 24; T19, line 5). Agent Grieco deployed approximately 15 other agents at various locations in and around the pier, so that each observation post was manned by two agents (T19-20), and each was connected to the others by radio (T177-176).

1. References preceded by the letter "T" are to the trial transcript.

At about 1:50 a.m., some 4 hours after the surveillance began, four men were observed[2] by Agent Graham (Agent Grieco's surveillance mate) aboard ship carrying heavy objects across a portion of the deck of the ship. Agent Graham so advised Agent Grieco, who then took up the binoculars which were being shared by the two men. Five minutes later, at 1:55 a.m., Agent Grieco received word by radio that one of the observation posts observed six men entering the pier area through a hole in a fence which led to the pier. The six were seen to proceed to an area behind a grain elevator building at which time they were no longer in sight (T351-352).

Agent Weinschenk was called by the Government and testified that a few moments before 2:00 a.m. he observed two men run from a point at or near the grain elevator building, Weinschenk's observation post, to the bow of the ship, at which point one of the two men lowered himself into the water while the other waited on the pier above (T327-328).

Agent Grieco then sent out the order to board the ship. Grieco arrived on board about 10 minutes after he lost sight of the men moving the bales (T214). Every person on the deck of the ship when the agents boarded was arrested, i.e., Defendants Marin, Flecha, Suarez and petitioner (T203, 216, 247). Indeed, Agent Cabrera, the man that placed petitioner under arrest had never seen petitioner before and had received no description of his appearance (T228-229, 371, 382). In his own words, he "wasn't looking for anyone in particular" when he boarded the ship (T367). He simply placed in custody anyone who happened to be on deck. Defendant Banguera was arrested on the pier and brought aboard the ship after being placed in custody.

2. The observation post in which Agent Grieco and Agent Graham were stationed was located in the State Pier Building which overlooked the subject vessel, and was approximately 207 feet distant from the point at which the movement of the bales was claimed to have taken place (T474). It was, of course, dark, and it was raining throughout the night. The agents were looking through a closed rainswept window. Agent Grieco testified that he made his observation while standing atop a desk in order to look out upon the upper tier of windows since the lower tier was covered with rain (T25, 26).

As noted earlier, Agent Grieco observed four men carrying bales aboard ship. He subsequently identified three of the four to be Flecha, Marin and petitioner. Agent Grieco testified as to the length of time during which he observed the four men carrying bales. He stated initially that he observed them for no more than four minutes (T41). Thereafter, he stated that his period of observation made with the benefit of binoculars was less than one minute (T212). A further refinement of this observation occurred on cross examination when Agent Grieco admitted that he was able to see a facial view of all four men simultaneously for less than 10 — 20 seconds (T213). The immediate scene was illuminated only by an overhead light attached to the mast.

Grieco further testified that he was looking at four different faces momentarily, and in his own words, he stated that this was his problem (T244). He said that since he had seen defendant Marin earlier in the evening on several occasions he was not required to allocate much of the 10 — 20 seconds of facial view to defendant Marin. He began then to concentrate on the other individuals, and testified that the most outstanding one there was the tall man that was not apprehended, and, whom he could not identify (T244). Grieco did not testify that he had seen petitioner at any time prior to the movement of the bales.

The inability of Grieco to identify the unapprehended man was pressed on cross examination by petitioner's trial counsel, who sought to show that the only reason that Grieco identified petitioner was because petitioner was in custody along with the men that Grieco was able to identify by virtue of his having seen them earlier in the evening.[3]

Finally, after the evasive response to the question noted in footnote 3, Agent Grieco admitted that he identified the three men accused of carrying the bales not

> "A. I cannot identify a fourth man.
> Q. And that is because, is it not, that that man wasn't there when your agents arrested them? Isn't it fair to say that if they arrested four men in the vicinity of the deckhouse you would have identified the fourth man as the man you saw dragging the bales?

> A. We didn't arrest the fourth man."

by their faces, but rather by their clothing.[4] In this regard, Grieco had testified earlier as to the clothing worn by the men carrying the bales and that as to petitioner all he could see was that he was wearing a dark zipper type jacket and some sort of a knit hat (T177).

Although there were approximately 25—30 other seamen aboard ship at this time (T443) no effort was made to conduct a line-up of these men in order to enable Grieco to pick out the unapprehended bale carrier. Grieco admitted that he couldn't identify the man if he faced him (T242). There was no testimony as to how many men aboard that ship were wearing dark zipper jackets and knit hats.

An inspection of the bales was made after the arrest took place, and revealed the presence of marijuana. The innermost wrapping paper had Spanish words written upon it (T184). It should also be noted that the bales consisted of an exterior covering of oil soaked burlap, such that

> "Q. ... Now what would it take to line up these men and try to pick out this third man? A. Well I could identify the clothing.
> Q. That is the same with these men, isn't it? You didn't identify their faces? A. No, Sir.

contact with the bales left tell-tale oil stains on whatever object was used to make contact with the bales (T266, 291).

A visual inspection of the five arrested defendants resulted in a seizure from defendant Marin of oil-stained trousers. Analysis established that the oil stains on Marin's trousers were not similar to the oil on the burlap bales (T477, 478). No clothing was seized from petitioner Gonzalez nor was there any testimony as to his appearing, in any respect, soiled with oil.

The Proof Against Petitioner Gonzalez

The Government called six witnesses in support of its case. Their testimony, as it relates to petitioner Gonzalez, will be considered here in the order in which it was presented by the Government.

1) Agent John A. Grieco, agent in charge of the operation, testified that Gonzalez was one of the four persons whom he observed moving the bales aboard ship at approximately 1:50 a.m. on March 26, 1973.

2) Agent Robert Graham was assigned to the same observation post as Agent Grieco, and was the second witness for the Government.

He testified that he made the initial observation concerning the movement of the bales aboard ship. Graham testified that of the men he observed moving bales, he was able to identify only two, namely Marin and Flecha (T306-307). Moreover, he testified to having seen Suarez, Marin and Flecha on several occasions earlier that evening but offered no testimony whatever about petitioner Gonzalez (T303-304).

3) Agent Eugene Weinschenk was next called by the Government. His testimony concerned observations of two men running onto the pier, one of whom lowered himself into the water while the other, defendant Banguera waited on the pier above. It was Agent Weinschenk who placed the defendant Banguera under arrest. He testified that at various times during the evening he saw the defendants Suarez and Flecha aboard ship (T331). At no time did he offer testimony concerning petitioner Gonzalez.

4) Agent Henry Maurer was next called by the Government. He had been assigned to a post on a tugboat and testified as to the observation he made of six men entering the pier through a hole in a fence, and proceeding to the area from which, moments later Banguera and the "swimmer" emerged and ran onto the pier (T349, 351). Maurer offered no testimony concerning petitioner.

5) Agent Victor Cabrera was next called by the Government. Cabrera is the man who placed petitioner under arrest. Prior to doing so he had never seen, nor been provided with a description of, Gonzalez. Cabrera arrested Gonzalez ostensibly because he observed him running on deck.[5] It should be noted that some ten minutes had

5. At trial it was established that Cabrera was in plain clothes as he boarded the ship, gun in hand and running. He slipped and his gun discharged accidentally. Once Gonzalez was informed as to the identity of Cabrera, he offered no resistance (T385). The Court refused to charge on consciousness of guilt inferrable from flight, upon the ground that under like circumstances any sensible man would do well to flee (T479).

elapsed from the time Agent Grieco saw bales being moved, to the point at which Cabrera saw Gonzalez aboard the deck (T565, line 23 to T567, line 8).

It was through Cabrera that the Government offered proof of a post-arrest statement by the petitioner. After the five defendants were arrested they were lined up on deck and Cabrera claims to have heard Gonzalez make a remark, in Spanish, the English translation of which is:

> "Why so much excitement? If we are caught we are caught" (T365).

Cabrera further testified that he is fluent in Spanish. He also admitted that the remark attributed to Gonzalez was a colloquialism and the first part of the statment could fairly be translated to mean "what's this all about" (T386).

6) The next and final Government witness was Manuel Restrepo, Captain of the Francisco Miguel. Restrepo testified that he never met, nor saw, Gonzalez before the agents exhibited the defendant to him (T434-435). He also testified that visitors were not permitted aboard ship in the evening (T404), and that men who break the rules are disciplined (T407). In essence, he stated that he ran a very tight ship and was hired for that purpose of asserting discipline aboard (T438). He also stated that no seamen would want the Captain to find friends aboard ship (T439).

Thus the entire case against Gonzalez rests upon the testimony of Agent Grieco who identified defendant under the circumstances described above as one of the men moving the bales, and the statement attributed to defendant by Agent Cabrera.

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

I.

This Court should resolve the conflict in circuits on the issue of whether in a case which presents a substantial question respecting the identification of an accused as a criminal actor, the trial judge should be required to charge sua sponte on the issue of identification such that the attention of the jury is focused upon the crucial issue of the case.

As to Petitioner Gonzalez the trial evidence presented by the Government, created as to him, a substantial question as to the sufficiency of the proof of his identity as a criminal actor. Consequently, the jury was required to consider and resolve this most fundamental of all issues.

Petitioner Gonzalez did not request the Court to charge on identification, and no charge on the subject was given. No exception was taken from the instructions given the jury by the trial judge.

In the instant case a substantial possibility exists that a misidentification occurred at trial. The circumstances surrounding Agent Grieco's observations are, when viewed in their totality, uncommonly bereft of the normal indicia of reliability.

The external conditions consisted of a nighttime viewing with illumination provided solely by an overhead light affixed to a mast at a height vastly greater than a normal street light. To further hamper the ability of the agents to observe, there was a steady downpour of rain which made the window through which the agents were looking so unsatisfactory a vantage point that it was necessary for the agent to stand atop a desk in order to peer out of the upper tier of windows which somehow was less rainswept than those below.

In addition the distance was approximately 207 feet from the window to the point at which the four men were carrying bales. The agents were using binoculars as well they must have. But even with the aid of binoculars one of the agents, Graham, testified that he was able to identify only those defendants whom he had previously seen during the course of the evening, and in any event the petitioner was not identifiable to him. The observations by Grieco as to the four men were made in the identical circumstances as were those of Graham.

It is undeniably true that the testimony of one witness may suffice in order to sustain a conviction in the type of case here on appeal. VII Wigmore on Evidence, Section 2034. This proposition should not foreclose inquiry, however, where substantial doubt exists as to the sufficiency and reliability of the identification evidence adduced. Where only one witness' identification is offered, and may suffice to convict, it is particularly relevant to consider the failure of another witness, whose opportunity to observe, prior acquaintance with the subject, training, etc. is identical to the witness who makes the identification. Sobel, Eye-witness Identification, p. 136.

As to the period of time during which Grieco was able to see the faces of the four men, by his own testimony it was a period of less than ten to twenty seconds during which all four simultaneously turned around. Add to these circumstances the fact that when boarding the ship some ten minutes later, Grieco saw petitioner in custody, standing with three other men whom he had been observing over the course of a four hour surveillance and whose "guilty" activities are by now well known to him, and the suggestiveness of this show-up [6] is readily apparent.

Further, the failure of Agent Grieco to conduct an immediate line-up of the other 25 — 30 seamen below deck attests to his total inability to make any type of identification of the fourth, unapprehended person, whose posture of identifiability was no different than that of the petitioner.

By reason of the circumstances described above, the question of whether the petitioner was the victim of a misidentification is a substantial one. Due to the absence of a charge which served to focus the attention of the jury on the eyewitness identification issue it cannot fairly be said that the question was properly left to the jury's consideration. In the instant case, when one considers that the jury was offered nothing but the bare assertion that "this is the man" and a partial description of the clothing, (dark jacket, knit cap) the question must be raised as to whether the jury was in possession of sufficient information upon which to make an informed judgment as to the establishment of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt. Little comfort can be found in the jury's verdict since at no time during the charge by the Court was the jury's attention focused upon the key issue of this case as to petitioner, namely the issue of identification.

6. It is not here argued that the show-up was impermissibly or unnecessarily suggestive. It is submitted that the confrontation was suggestive, albeit necessary, and that the suggestiveness is a factor to be considered in the totality of circumstances surrounding the reliability and trustworthiness of the identification by Agent Grieco.

A distinction should be drawn between charging as to the dangers of eyewitness identification, as was requested in United States v. Fernandez, 456 F.2d 638 (2 Cir. 1972) and United States v. Evans, slip op., p. 5201 at 5217 (2 Cir. 1973) and charging on identification simply to frame the issue and focus the attention of the jury upon its significance, as in Jones v. United States, 124 U.S. App. D.C. 83, 361 F.2d 537, 542 (D.C. Cir. 1966), and United States v. Levi, 405 F.2d 380 at 382, 383 (4 Cir. 1968).

It is not here argued that it is plain error for the trial judge to fail, upon request or otherwise, to charge the dangers of eyewitness identification in all identification cases. It is argued that in a case which presents so crucial an identification question as the one at bar, plain error can, and does occur where the jury is not instructed by the trial judge that an identification issue exists and must be resolved by the jury before reaching the question of whether the alleged crimes were committed. Optimally, the jury should be given some guidance with respect to dealing with such an issue, and at that juncture, depending upon the circumstances of the case, a cautionary charge may be necessary, but at the least the jury's attention must be focused on the issue if they are to be enabled to properly discharge their duty.

In order for a lay jury to scrutinize eyewitness identification testimony "in an especially carefully way", United States v. Rabb, 453 F.2d 1012 (Cir. 3, 1971), they must first be instructed to do so. It is by now apparent that juries do not understand intuitively how to deal with the dangers of eyewitness identification.

In other Circuits, there has been a perceptible evolution in the cases treating the question posed by this appeal.

In 1942, the Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia decided McKenzie v. United States, 75 U.S. App. D.C. 270, 126 F.2d 533. In that case the Court noted that there was a need for special instructions when a key issue of identification was presented. Thereafter in Gregory v. United States, 369 F.2d 185 (D.C. Cir. 1966) the Court held the trial judge's instructions to the jury were deficient:

> "In spite of the fact that the only real issue presented by the evidence was the identification of the defendant, no charge on identification was given. As to both robberies, there was a division among the eyewitnesses as to whether or not the defendant on trial was the bandit. Yet the jury's attention was not focused on the fact that it not only had to find beyond a reasonable doubt that the crimes had been committed as charged before the defendant could be convicted, but also that beyond a reasonable doubt it was the defendant on trial who had committed them." (Emphasis supplied.) Gregory, supra at 190.

In United States v. Levi, 405 F.2d 380 (Cir. 4, 1968) a bank robbery case, the trial evidence clearly established that the crime had been committed. The primary issue was identification and the Court there adopted the reasoning of the District of Columbia Circuit as enunciated at that time in Jones v. United States, 124 U.S. App. D.C. 83, 361 F.2d 537. The Fourth Circuit affirmed Levi's conviction only after noting that the trial judge did adequately focus the attention of the jury upon the identification issue in the case.

In addition to the Fourth and D.C. Circuits, the Third Circuit has recommended the use of a cautionary charge in eyewitness cases. United States v. Barber, 442 F.2d 517 (3 Cir. 1971). It is true the Barber case holding was to be applied prospectively. But note, too, that in Barber, unlike the case at bar, the Court did charge on identification generally, thus focusing the attention of the jury upon the issue in the case. Barber, supra at 525. Barber also held that in cases in which the witness had ample time to observe, is positive of his identification and is unshaken on cross-examination, then a cautionary charge would not be mandatory. It is submitted that under the Barber holding, the case at bar, had it been a Third Circuit case, would have required a cautionary charge, and not merely an instruction which alerted the jury to the issue of the case.

The evolution noted earlier became complete when the District of Columbia Court of Appeals decided United States v. Telfaire, 469 F.2d 552 (D.C. Cir. 1972). In Telfaire, a robbery case, the victim-witness spent considerable time with the defendant before and during the robbery. [7] The trial Court did not give a special

7. The opinion does not specify the amount of time but does state that the witness met the defendant in front of a hotel, conversed with him and accompanied him to the third floor of the hotel where further conversation ensued.

cautionary identification charge. The Court of Appeals affirmed, stating, inter alia,

> "In this case, as in Macklin, we consider the instructions given by the trial judge — both the initial instructions on the burden of proving beyond a reasonable doubt all the elements of the offense, and the follow-on instructions dealing with the defense of alibi, and the problem context of the case and we are satisfied that the attention of the jury was significantly focused on the issue of identity." Telfaire, supra at 556. (Emphasis supplied.)

Furthermore, the Court said that the facts in that case did not offer the special difficulties often present in identification cases, which would require that additional information be given to the jury in order to enable the Court to

> "repose confidence in (the jury's) ability to evaluate the reliability of the identification." Telfaire at 556.

The model instructions set forth in the Appendix to Telfaire, while not deemed by the Circuit Court to be mandatory, are not to be ignored absent strong reasons.

Finally, the Court added a further refinement to the doctrine first enunciated in McKenzie, supra, in 1942. In Telfaire, supra, at 555, footnote 11, the Court stated that identification instructions should be included as a matter of routine and that in cases in which identification is a main issue, the judge should not rely on defense counsel to request such a charge.

The Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit while giving express recognition to the dangers inherent in eyewitness identification cases has declined to rule that a charge on identification, even one which is limited to focusing the attention of the jury on the issue, is required.

It is respectfully submitted that this Court should rule on the applicability of Telfaire, supra, and Barber, supra to the instant case, and determine whether in the light of the reasoned holdings of the aforesaid cases, the petitioner has been denied his right to a fair trial by virtue of the refusal of the Second Circuit to adopt the rationale there presented.

CONCLUSION

For the above reasons this Court should issue a writ of certiorari to review the order of the United States Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit.

Respectfully submitted,
